The Ultimate Valentine's Gift – Romantics Show Love in the Virtual World

From the Pyramids at Giza to Spurs FC, romantics show love in the virtual Weblo world

[ClickPress, Tue Jan 30 2007] Romance is turning 'virtual' this year with lovers around the World showing their affections by purchasing their partner everything from Paris, the 'city of love', to the Playboy Mansion, or their favourite holiday villa in the virtual world of Weblo.com.

The latest social networking site, Weblo.com offers properties, towns, cities, and domain names for sale, in a virtual version of the real world. Everything from the London Eye to Edinburgh Castle is being bought and traded for real money, with members making profits from transactions and advertising revenue generated by traffic to their cities, states and asset web pages.

Properties are already being re-sold for profit - the virtual mayor of Washington D.C. sold his city for a 300 per cent profit; the virtual mayor of Vancouver recently sold his city for $503 and made a $385 profit. Small towns are inexpensive, selling for as little as five dollars, while famous properties start from one dollar. The first owner of the Empire State Building paid one dollar and re-sold it for $250, making this year's Valentine's gift a potential investment.

"Weblo is like Monopoly on steroids, and now people around the World are enjoying the buzz," says Rocky Mirza, CEO and co-founder of Weblo.com. "With Valentine's Day just a couple of weeks away we're seeing a growing number of people buying and trading assets to give as gifts to their partner. You can buy a place or property that's personal to you, for example where you got engaged, while also offering the potential to make real money."

Members attract traffic to their Weblo.com websites with compelling content including photo galleries, forums, polls and videos. Members profit from advertising revenue generated from their sites. In addition, owners of cities, states and airports earn a percentage of all transactions within their territories.
