Virtual world Web site Weblo.com has announced it will be selling virtual England via auction, with the winning bidder crowned King or Queen. Weblo is run by a company based in Montreal. Top bids for England are expected to reach $70,000.

The new King or Queen of Weblo's England will not only get the prestigious title, but shall also be privy to tax profits in the virtual world, which has been dubbed "Monopoly on steroids."

Spokesperson Sean Morrow said: "We thought we could break out of the mold by not just letting someone be the president of a country, but the virtual king or queen. We already have teams of Weblonians, citizens of Weblo, expressing interest."

Why

would anyone in their right mind spend real money for fake real estate. How stupid are humans, anyway?

I think

I will stick to Entropia ... where theyve already sold 3 malls each more or less the same as this one country.

@Lurker

Second Life people waste money on virtual real estate. I refuse to even log on, the who concept is "Just-Too-Geeky"! Even by my standards!! Kapla!
